

SDGs for all (majors)

The SDGs are important for all college students regardless of their course of study as they pertain to issues that are worldwide regarding every human being. Everyone should spend some time learning about Sustainability. Colleges and universities are increasing efforts to promote sustainable campus life and students can make a huge difference if they are involved.

Students with different degree backgrounds can bring their unique perspectives to the table and help make sustainability easier to incorporate in society as a whole. People are influenced by their peers whether they want to be or not, and educating young adults at the high school and collegiate level can change the world.